

New Doctors at MKU Hospital

MK University Hospital has welcomed sixty medical students to their new teaching facility this week.

The partnership with the University of Buckingham means the number of students training across all departments will dramatically increase to around 120 over the next three years.

A new Â£8.5m Academic Centre due to open next February will provide cutting-edge clinical skills training and education facilities for students, hospital staff, doctors, nurses and health professionals across Bucks and beyond.

Another positive move for the future of our hospital.
